Take Simmons' Liver Regulator For all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen

WILL CURE DYSPEPSIA.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has attained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable -that wolfsbane of our American people, Dyspessia.
A. E. P. ALBERT,
Professor in Nicholas Public School, Parish of Terrebonne, La.

MALARIOUS FEVERS

You are at liberty to use my name in praise of your Regulator as prepared by you, and re-commend it to every one as the best preventive for Fever and Ague in the world. I plant in southwestern Georgia, near Albany, Georgia, and must say that it has done more good on my plantation among my negroes than any medi-cine I ever used. It supersedes quinine if taken in time Yours, &c., Hon. B. H. HILL, Ga.

CONSTIPATION. TESTIMONY OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE OF (FEORGIA. -I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for constipation of my bowels, caused by a temporary derangement of the liver, for the last three or four years, and always, when used according to the directions, with decided benefit. I think it is a good medicine for the derangement of the liver-at least such has been my personal experience in the use of it. HIRAM WARNER, Chief Justice of Georgia.

SICK HEADACHE. EDITORIAL-We have tested its virtues, personally, and know that for Dyspepeia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world eversaw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us.—[Editor Tele-graph and Messenger, Ma-

Having had during the last twenty years of my life to attend to Racing Stock, and having had so much trouble with them with Colic, Grubbs, &c., gave me a great deal of trouble. Prince Bismarck.

The American artist, Mr. Healy, who has just finished a portrait of Prince Bismarck for Prince Charles, of Roumania, has returned to Paris, and gives the following account to a cor respondent of the New York Herald: The Prince was busy when the artist first called, which gave him an opportunity to ask some particulars as to the Chancellor's daily habits. He was informed that the Prince was in the habit of working all night, and that he rarely retired to bed before six in the morning. He generally slept until noon, when he took a oup of tea, dressed and occupied himself with his dispatches until two, when he received his Cabinet Ministers and Ambassadors. At halfpast three he drove to the Parliament House, where he occasionally took part in the debates. Between five and six he frequently went to see the Emperor, after which he dined. At five o'clock Mr. Healy was sent for by the Prince. He describes the Chancellor as a splendidly proportioned man, about six feet three in height, and with grave but courteous manners. He told him that he had ordered two rooms to be set apart for his work in that wing of the Foreign office where his mother had died and where he himself had passed much of his time when a young man, the Minister of the day having been an intimate friend of his. He asked the artist how many sittings he thought he would require, and on being told six (of two hours each) he expressed himself, alarmed at the idea of losing so much valuable time. After sitting a while, however, he became interested in the work, and as soon as he saw the head painted in he said: "This is really remarkable; it is quite different from the German, French and English schools. Who was your master? Where did you study?"

"I studied first in the United States," said

Mr. Healy, "and then in Europe. I never had any particular master." "I can understand that," replied the Prince.

"You evidently strive to render the individual character of each sitter. You have more to do with nature than with schools.' The Princess saw the picture after the second sitting, and from that time they both took great interest in the work. The Prince went to the artist's room as often as possible, and sometimes the sittings were very short. The time he gave most unwillingly was for the hands. He said he never saw an artist so particular about an exact likeness of the details of the person of the sitter. "Our painters depict handsome hands," he added, "and that is all; but Mr. Healy, I think, you are right." At one of the sittings the Prince asked Mr. Healy if he had ever exhibited at the Paris Salon? The artist replied in the affirmative, but added that the works he had exhibited there were principally portraits.

"Whose portraits?" inquired the Prince, with interest. "Oh, a good many, of persons not known to Your Highness," replied the artist, "and some that are-such as the Pope and M. Thiers. "I always liked M. Thiers," observed the Prince. "He has all the politeness of the old school, which I am sorry to say is fast passing excellent Frenchman in everything relating to the interests of his country."

Another day, contrary to his usual babit, he entered the artist's studio in a purple dressing gown and cap, and observing that Mr. Healy was rather struck by this transformation, for he is rarely or never seen out of uniform, he away, and I must admit that I found him an said to him with a smile : "I see that you admire my costume. Would I not have made a good bishop?" After the reception at the palace on the Emperor's birthday he went straight to the studio without changing his uniform, which, for full dress, was entirely white.

"I am more at home in that," he said, point ing to the portrait in which he is painted in undress uniform, "and still more at home here," he added, with a smile, as he took a chair in front of the picture. "I can tell you, that I am heartily glad to sit down after standing so long at that ceremonious reception." The Prince seldem gives dinner parties, and, owing to the state of his health, rarely dines out. Mr. Healy, however, was honored with an invitation to dine with the family and a few guests. He was scated between the Prince and Princess at table and was greatly interested by the Chancellor's conversation, which consisted principally of anecdotes of his early life. It should be stated that Prince Bismarck and his family speak English and French fluently and, indeed, idiomatically. This contributed, of course, very much to the comfort and ease of our artist, whose stock of German is of the most limited kind. Mr. Healey describes the Princess as a tall graceful weman of about fifty, with splendid eyes and features combining strength with delicacy. Her manners are most gracious and sympathetic. Her daughter is a flue young woman, with dark eyes and hair and a very clear, pure complexion. Her face is a most in teresting one and indicates great sweetness of character. The son is about twenty four and has a strong resemblance to his father. He is in the army and is said to be a young man of high attainments. What is most to be admired in this family is the great modesty and amiability of its members and their apparent unconsciousness of the value of their exceptional po-

On the 23d of March the portrait was shown to several officials and friends of the family, and appeared to give general satisfaction. The Baron de Holstein, an amiable young officer attached to the Prince's household, who had shown Mr. Healy the greatet attention since his arrival in Berlio, was extravagant in his praise of it, and pronounced it "an immense success." The Prince, smiling in his enthusiasm, inquired of the artist it he could make a then the copy could itself be called an original. Prince Bismarck inquired the price of a copy made under such circumstances. When the
